

Free Transmitters for School Projects

You may remember Tannis Thorlakson, who participated in a satellite tracking project with transmitters we donated to Liberty Bell High School in 2002, and who is now a student at Harvard College. Tannis said of her experience, "As I stop to reflect on what initially shaped my interest for environmental work, I immediately jump to my involvement with the Chelan Ridge Raptor Migration Project."

Similarly, Nomin Erdene, a participant in the Mongolian Great Bustard school project we featured in our winter 2006 newsletter, found her interest piqued by the experience. She is now at the National University of Mongolia studying bioinformatics.

Over the past twenty years it has been our pleasure to work with researchers whose projects involve school children. It is our hope that early exposure to the sciences will spark a lifelong interest. To this end, in celebration of our 20th anniversary we will be donating satellite transmitters for school projects, just as we did for our tenth and fifteenth anniversaries.

If you are involved with your local middle or high school, here is your chance to shape the next generation of biologists with an opportunity for the students to get some hands-on experience with satellite telemetry. Rules and application will be posted on our website in mid-August 2011. The deadline for application is September 30, 2011. The winner will be announced in our winter newsletter.

Our Sympathy...

Our hearts ache for the people of Japan in the wake of the devastating earthquake and tsunami which struck there earlier this spring. Likewise we pray for those here in the United States who are dealing with the aftermath of hundreds of tornados. We have made donations to the Red Cross to provide whatever help is needed in Japan and in affected communities here.
